This is a strong downtempo debut from Switzerland's Vince le Barde. As Electrypnose he has already had tracks featured on Ajana's 'A Magical Journey' compilation series. Electrypnose describes his chosen styles as " ambient, trip hop, melodic electronic music, sofa surfing, experimental inspired by Aphex Twin or venetian snare ... and more" - quite a range, yet the result is tightly coherent and with a tidy vision of its own. As his most inventive Vin's produces tracks where almost every bar differs from the next - especially well done in the excellent opening track 'Submarine'.

Lucid electronic dream spaces - at times hypnotic and trancey, then melodic and wistful. Indeed a melancholy air in keeping with the title is held through many of the tracks - the choice of key and chordal patterns leading to harmonies and themes that automatically suggest gentle sorrows.

Artist profile:

Arrived from we don't know where nor how, without really knowing why, "Electrynose" aka 'Vince le Barde' living in Switzerland is exploring and trying to share a wide ranging sound universe.

He grew up in a family deeply involved in classical music for the last 3 generations, maybe more. So, of course music was an impossible thing to circumvent for him. He simply loves each form of sound since there is some richness in it. Ily have a static preference for a style. It depends on the mood.

Electrynose is working on different kinds of music like ambient, trip hop, melodic electronic music, sofa surfing, experimental inspired by Aphex Twin, Venetian Snare, or Matmos and Mouse on Mars.
